2024 is a year of navigating unknowns, demanding agility, strategic foresight and an adaptable, forward-thinking workforce. The overriding theme this year is one of a settling working landscape since the disruption of the pandemic and resulting global economic difficulties.

Peter Moore MRICS
CEO

The global real estate industry dances on a tightrope of cautious optimism and lingering concern. While pandemic extremes stabilise, normalization brings its own uncertainties amidst the backdrop of inflation, tightening affordability and dampening demand. Despite this, resilience prevails with anticipation of stability in the latter half of the year, potentially sparking recovery.

In essence, 2024 is a year of navigating unknowns, demanding agility, strategic foresight and an adaptable, forward-thinking workforce.

For 24 years, our 'Salary, Rewards and Attitudes' survey report remains the most comprehensive benchmark for remuneration and sentiments in real estate, empowering hiring professionals and employers to make strategic decisions that enhance their workforce and talent management strategies. This year's report references over 15,000 international salaries, remaining the reporting benchmark across the international real estate industry.

We are grateful for our participants taking their time to complete the survey, providing information on how much their remuneration packages have evolved and how working in Real Estate measures up today. The report offers a robust overview on how the industry has adapted work patterns, salaries, bonuses and overall employment packages providing clarification on market trends for professionals and organizations.

The overriding theme this year is one of a settling working landscape since the disruption of the pandemic, encouraged by leaders determined for a structured workplace in an uncertain climate.

Salary, Rewards & Attitudes Survey

The Macdonald & Company Salary, Rewards and Attitudes survey report has been conducted annually for over 20 years. The 2024 report will be its 24th edition.

The survey has expanded to cover our global footprint and reaches respondents across the sectors and real estate cycle stages, including investment & funds, development, services and more.

The survey annually generates between 3000-8000 responses and is combined with 10,000+ salary data points from our database of placements made, job instructions and candidate data in the last 12 months. Combining this information creates a robust understanding of salary, work and attitude trends that are unique for the real estate industry.

Alongside the foundational questions that are asked yearly – such as salary and bonus details, benefit packages and their monetary value – we include questions based on trending topics to gather insights into market. Where the last few years have focused on the rapidly changing attitudes and work patterns since the pandemic, this year's theme has shifted to discover what other incentives, outside of salary and flexible work, employees value and covet when considering new opportunities. Other emerging and consistent themes have discussed diversity with an historic track record on the gender pay gap, and more recently, the ethnicity pay gap.

Tips for professionals

1 Consistently review and discuss your performance

Don't wait until your annual pay review to take stock of your achievements and concerns. Even 'small wins' and suggestions on improvements are worth listing throughout the year so that you have the information to hand. Anything of great importance can also be brought up with your manager as and when they occur so that they are always aware of your performance.

3 Benchmark your salary

Benchmark your salary and package to stay well informed about the average compensation in your position. Using this guide is a great start; you can also sign up to job alerts to not only acquire knowledge of salaries on offer in your profession, but to keep ahead on how your role is evolving as market demands fluctuate.

5 Develop professional soft skills

Hiring managers are increasingly seeking those who possess 'soft professional skills' that contribute to success. Strong communication, negotiation skills, commercial acumen, emotional intelligence and influencing skills are in high demand. You can seek out formal training, workshops, or online courses tailored to developing these soft professional skills.

2 Cultivate your workplace relationships

Our industry encourages success by networking and actively engaging with peers both inside and outside our organizations. With workplace culture-fit high on the list of priorities in a workplace, ensuring clear communication, reliability and accountability where you work is advice both junior and senior level professionals can take on board to cultivate and maintain positive working relationships.

4 Join a professional body

Joining a professional body like the ULI can help you gain industry recognition. You can connect with top professionals for potential partnerships, and access valuable resources and market insights. Smaller local groups allow you to have a voice and representation with local government to enact change.

6 Update your professional profile and resume

You may not currently be looking for a new role but updating your resume and online professional profile (LinkedIn, etc.) can help draw in fantastic opportunities for you to consider. Keeping this information up to date also helps you to evaluate where you are in your career, your professional goals and your next steps.

CEO

If the last four years has proven anything, it's that flexibility and resilience is a change that is constant. Leaders need a team who can adapt to meet constantly evolving needs of the market.

Tips for leaders and hiring managers

1 Be mindful of the wider economic impact on staff

Whilst organizations must contend with varying degrees of change in the economy, be cautiously aware of the impact inflation and the cost of living has on your workforce. Money-matters have a direct correlation with well-being, which, in turn, affects productivity. 20% of respondents say they had received a pay increase to cover the Cost of Living/Inflation which averaged at 6.7% (just over 5.8% of the global rate cited by the IMF).

3 Reevaluate your benefits package

Just under two-thirds say they are not satisfied with their current employment package, and this number increases to 7 in 10 for junior or entry level employees who often aren't eligible or for bonuses and other benefits that senior leaders are entitled to.

5 Review your company culture and values

One in 5 real estate professionals will likely move jobs this year, and workplace culture was the second reason (after remuneration) that 1 in 10 respondents felt undervalued. For those mindful of their staff retention, this isn't ideal news. Consider evaluating your company culture and values with regular communication with staff, as well as monitoring remuneration packages to prevent losing your best talent.

Have a vacancy to fill?
Send us a brief of your requirements and we'll be in touch to discuss how we can help. Click the yellow icon.

2 Remain flexible, where possible

Despite differing opinions on how we should work, remain flexible where possible. A work-life balance and the option of having flexible working remain highly important, particularly for women in the profession. On the flip side, provide support for junior members of the organization who benefit from in-person interactions with their team at the start of their careers.

4 Leverage a skills-first approach

Your organization's unique team collectively contribute to its successes and a needs to attract and retain the best talent with specific skill-sets; whether that be hands on experience with like-for-like asset classes or an ideal combination of soft skills. 56% of respondents say their organization is likely to face a skills shortage in the next year.

6 Utilize market-mapping and benchmarking

Get the tools and resources you need to dissect real-time hiring trends, salary data, employment packages and more. Macdonald & Company can help your benchmark with information most relevant to your organization to keep you ahead of hiring and staff retention.
